 Worth Telling Again.

Waverly Magazine. Twenty years have passed since a certain Irishman, entering the port of New York, telegraphed his wife at back to join him at the metropolis prepared for a sea voyage. As cordially a day or two after the arrival of the magazine saw the wife embarked upon the through train from back to Boston, accompanied by an infant child scarcely two years old.

This car was coupled on to the end of the Portland train at Brunswick, and, leaving the child asleep, the Captain's wife seized the opportunity to fill the baby's bottle with milk in the depot restaurant. While the mother was intent upon her errand the train slipped quietly out of the station, and when the mother emerged from the restaurant door it was fast disappearing under the Springfield bridge. Kagerly explained the situation to the sympathizing group of railroad men who gathered around. Baby and nurse, containing all her money and ticket, were in the fast disappearing train. A hurried council followed, and a plan was instantly formed.

Old No. 23, "The Brunswick," was sidetracked, waiting the passage of the train just gone. Uncle Thompson, the station baggage master at that time, ran hastily to this engine and asked her aid to overtake the flying train. The general, ever ready to aid the cause of any female in distress, volunteered to catch the robber. Hastily filling the firebox with wood from the tender, while Thompson was assisting the woman to mount the engine, with a command to the fireman to "give us the main line," with head upon the throttle, No. 23 flew quickly over the switch and commenced her run.

An empty engine chasing a heavy train up "back hill grade," which extends four miles straight away from Brunswick has an easy task, and before they had covered more than half of that distance they could see the object of their pursuit.

To sound his whistle, calling the attention of the train men to the chase, and thereby stop the train, was not part of the programme. Daring that he might run over them should they suddenly stop. So gently running along the rear of the train descending the pursuit, he soon successfully belated them. Then his tender—their eyes were running backward—rubs against the rear platform of the train, and while the engineer holds her there Thompson runs to the woman over the tender, down upon the platform of the car containing the baby. All fast asleep, the mother sleeping lightly the battle of wits.

The prohibition question is to have another train in Winchester at a special election to be held next June.

Paying the Responsibility.

Blundering men, instead of admitting their responsibility, try to excuse themselves by throwing the blame on others. A single story illustrates this tendency of human nature, and also the French proverb: "He accuses who accuses himself." On night thieves broke into a rich man's house and carried off all his valuables. On being arrested, they excused their crime by saying that they were blameless, as the walls of the house were so badly built as to tempt them to break through. The man was therefore to blame for the robbery. The man was brought before the magistrate. "The fault is not mine," said he, "but that of the people who made the mortar badly."

The roofer laid the blame upon the potter who had sold him a cracked vessel in which he could not carry sufficient water to mix the mortar properly. The potter explained that the blame could not be laid upon him but upon a pretty woman, who, passing while he was making the vessel, so riveted his attention that he forgot about his work. The woman protested that the goldsmith was at fault. He had failed to send home her earrings and she passed the potter's shop on her way to get them. The goldsmith, not being able to offer an excuse for his neglect, was sentenced to be hanged. His friends begged the judge to spare him, as he was sick and in favour and would not make a pretty spectacle. "But somebody must be hanged," said the judge. His attention was thereupon called to a fat Moor in a shop opposite, and the judge ordered him to be hanged in the goldsmith's stead.—Argument.

In Hindoostan, where three varieties of sacred monkeys enjoy the freedom of every town, those fair handed personages often assist the police in enforcing the rules law by charging en masse for the scene of every dog fight and schoolboy scuffle. They will rescue worried cats and, for greater security, deposit them on the next roof, or suppress rowdiness in general; the stout little baboon for instance, being physically as well as morally qualified to quell the aggressive disposition of the ferocious cat. On the platform of a public warehouse the British residents of Agra, a few years ago, witnessed a scene which put the character trait in even a stronger light.

A little dwarf, Arab had spread his pallet in the shade of a stack of country produce, and had just dropped asleep, when the proprietor of the Planter's hotel strolled up with a pet leopard that had learned to accompany him in all his rambles. A troop of tramp monkeys had taken post on the opposite end of the shed, and, like the "tiger boys," seemed to enjoy a comfortable life. At sight of the speckled intruder the whole gang charged, a wedge about the little sleeper, each one leaping with bristling manes, evidently resolved to defeat the purpose of his visit.—Popular Science Monthly.

Collector: I have called six times, sir, for the amount of this bill already.
 Citizen: Who-at, six times? Is it possible you have been put in all that annoyance? Now, I'll tell you what I'll do: when I feel like paying the amount I will call on you myself. It's outrageous to give a man the trouble I have gone through merely given him—(Lies).

Her grandfather was so sick that the report got out that she was dead. A sympathetic old grocerman and the clerk on the street, "And where a poor grandfather is to be buried, my dear?" he asked her.
 "Not till she's dead, sir."

The House Wife for February

published at Springfield, Mass., is a most excellent remedy of this year's household periodical. It is worth all it costs, 50 cents per year.

During Jan. there was a net increase of $6,250,000 in money and bullion in the Treasury, and yet you can't borrow a dollar from Sam, no matter how hard you are.
